Currently, the Department is conducting two major named operations to fight the U.S. global war on terrorism: Operation Noble Eagle and Operation Enduring Freedom. These operations drive costs in support of increased alert and flying operations, as well as heightened security and increased tempo associated with the Global War on Terrorism. While most of these costs have been covered by the FY 2002 Supplemental, remaining costs include reimbursement to the Air Force Commands/Wings for on-going sustainment of both deployed and home-station costs to include: aircraft battle damage repair; civilian overtime/overhires; contracts for transportation, lodging, dining, communications for expanded 24/7 operations; and supplies and equipment at installations in CONUS and overseas.

To continue military operations, members of the Air National Guard (ANG) have been called to active duty, largely to back those active personnel now deployed in support of both operations. At the time that the DoD requested Emergency Supplemental funding for these operations, it was assumed that there would be some level of demobilization of Reserve Component Personnel. However, the demobilization is not occurring within the Air Force as had been anticipated. Funds are therefore available because ANG members were mobilized and unavailable for training. The Military Personnel, Air Force appropriation finances ANG members when they are mobilized.
